

Petal and the Puddle of Colors

An Oodleloo story

The rain stopped, and Petal found a puddle as round and shiny as a mirror.

Petal dipped one paw in blue paint and swirled it in. The puddle turned blue as a summer sky.

Then Petal dipped in yellow. Swirl, swirl. The puddle turned bright green like new leaves!

"Green!" gasped Petal. "I did not even bring green!"

Pokey splashed over with a pot of red. "What happens if we try this one?"

Blue and red made purple. Red and yellow made orange, warm as a sunset.

They made every color there was, and then some colors that had never been made before.

The puddle looked like a rainbow that had fallen over and decided to stay a while.

"Colors like company," said Petal happily, with green paint on the tip of her nose.
